ABDUCTED COMMUNITY ACTIVIST MAY BE DEAD

Information passed to relatives of missing community activist Juan Almonte Herrera in the Dominican Republic suggests that he may be dead. His family has been threatened and intimidated.

Juan Almonte Herrera, a member of Dominican community organization Mundo, was abducted by four armed men on 28 September after he was named as a suspect in a kidnapping case. Eyewitnesses identified the armed men as police officers. According to information passed to his relatives, it is likely that his is one of two burned bodies recently recovered in the capital, Santo Domingo. The bodies are currently being identified through DNA tests.

Since Juan Almonte's abduction, his relatives have been under surveillance by individuals identified by eyewitnesses as police officers. His relatives are followed by car and watched from the street in front of their house constantly. His sister has received anonymous telephone calls asking her to stop publicizing her brother's abduction.

Hours after Juan Almonte was abducted, police announced that they were searching for him in relation to a kidnapping. Two other men named as suspects in the same case, Cecilio Díaz and William de Jesús Checo Batista, died in police custody on 10 October. According to police reports, they died in an "exchange of fire" (intercambios de disparos) with police officers. However, the authorities who detained the two men have declared publicly that they handed them to the police alive. The public prosecutor heading an inquiry into these two deaths has ordered the arrest of two police officers pending the outcome of the inquiry. Another man named as a suspect in the kidnapping, Ramon Polanco, is missing. At least eight people are in custody in relation to the same kidnapping case. Amnesty International has received reports that some detainees have been tortured or otherwise ill-treated.
