Further Information on UA 28/09 (AMR 37/002/2009, 4 February 2009) Fear for safety/Death threats

HONDURAS Bertha Oliva (f), coordinator of the Committee of Relatives of the Disappeared in Honduras (Comité de Familiares de Detenidos Desaparecidos en Honduras, COFADEH)
Other members of staff at COFADEH

Bertha Oliva was kept under surveillance on 11 March by a man who fled when he realised he had been seen. She has been receiving some police protection since 14 March, but it is inadequate, and she and her colleagues are still in danger.

On 11 March Bertha Oliva had been dining with a colleague and a relative at a restaurant in the capital, Tegucigalpa. At around 8.45pm a man walked into the restaurant and remained near the main door for about a minute, from where he watched Bertha Oliva. He then walked out, got into a car and drove off. Neither Bertha Oliva nor her companions saw the man.

About five minutes later, the same man drove up to the restaurant in a different car. He pulled up alongside Bertha Oliva's car, which was parked outside, and looked inside. When he realised that someone was watching him, he drove away. Bertha Oliva called the police, who arrived about 40 minutes later. The police officers did not question anyone at the restaurant that evening.

The Public Prosecutor's Office has not reported any advances in their investigations into this incident, or into the death threats Bertha Oliva received on 27 January.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

Bertha Oliva, some of her colleagues and the COFADEH offices have been targeted on other occasions. On 10 September 2008, two plainclothes police officers were discovered with a list of 135 activists and their organizations, including Bertha Oliva and COFADEH. The officers, who were carrying out surveillance outside the office of a trade union, also had a camera with photographs of the offices of several NGOs, including COFADEH. The two officers were arrested, but have since been released.

On 6 July 2008 Bertha Oliva and her daughter were followed by two men. On 31 August, a colleague of Bertha Oliva was followed by another two men. The offices of COFADEH had been broken into on 3 July and 5 August: both times, files containing sensitive information were stolen, together with some valuables. An investigation has yet to take place.
