Prisoners of Political Repression

Thousands of political prisoners have been held in detention since large scale public unrest erupted in Myanmar in March 1988, when demonstrations, initially led by students and Buddhist monks, called for an end to 26 years of military one-party rule. Hundreds were arrested in connection with elections in May 1990, when the National League for Democracy (NLD, the main opposition party led by Daw Aung San Suu Kyi) won 60 % of valid popular votes, and 81 % of seats. After the elections, ruling military authorities did not convene parliament or announce a timetable for the transfer of power to a civilian government, and any subsequent attempts by the NLD and other groups to influence this process have led to widespread arrests and lengthy prison terms.

The following lists give details of 458 prisoners known to Amnesty International of the 1,850 political prisoners currently detained in Myanmar: the result of more than a decade of continuous official repression of peaceful dissent in the country. They include students, politicians, doctors, farmers, teachers, journalists, writers, lawyers, comedians and housewives, who have been penalized for peacefully demonstrating; distributing or possessing uncensored leaflets or videos; seeking redress for human rights violations; telling jokes; wearing yellow; or talking to foreign journalists. Amnesty International is concerned that the majority of these prisoners are being held solely on account of their peaceful exercise of the rights to freedom of assembly, association and expression. All prisoners who have been sentenced have received trials which fall short of international standards of fairness. Many have been denied legal counsel, and the majority have been sentenced under vaguely worded and arbitrarily applied security legislation, which subjects rights and freedoms to greater restrictions than are necessary to meet requirements of morality, public order and general welfare. A number of those listed have been held without charge or trial for nearly three years. Many of those who have completed their sentences remain in detention, held there by executive decree under administrative detention laws, and without recourse to legal appeal of their detention.

Amnesty International is further concerned that many prisoners have been held incommunicado for months, illegally detained, tortured and held in conditions amounting to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment during interrogation and imprisonment. In most cases, political prisoners are not allowed reading or writing material, and are sometimes held in special punishment cells. Political prisoners are not allowed to send or receive letters. Family visits are allowed only once every two weeks for 15 minutes, and are conducted in the presence of guards, who often take notes. Overcrowding is also common, with three or four prisoners held in small cells for most of the day. The prison diet and medical treatment are both poor. Families are allowed to bring additional food and medicines for prisoners, but these are sometimes confiscated. Political prisoners are often moved to prisons far from their families, making it more difficult for relatives to visit them, and restricting access to extra food and medicine. Scores of political prisoners have died in custody, some of them reportedly from torture, and some from ill-health exacerbated by the nature of their treatment and lack of adequate medical care while in detention.

Amnesty International urges Myanmar's government, the State Peace and Development Council to:

- ! Immediately and unconditionally release all prisoners held on account of their peaceful exercise of the rights to freedom of association and expression;
- ! To make public full information on all detainees;
- ! To investigate all allegations of incommunicado detention and torture, and take steps to bring those responsible to justice, and to take immediate steps to put an end to these practices;
- ! To carry out a review of all security legislation which is being used to criminalize peaceful dissent and freedom of assembly, expression and association, and to revoke or amend such legislation to ensure conformity with international standards;
- ! To take steps to ensure fair trials for all political prisoners and to review all trials of political prisoners which have fallen short of appropriate international standards.

The following two lists detail 458 of the 1,850 political prisoners reportedly detained in Myanmar and believed by Amnesty International to be held on account of their peaceful exercise of the rights to freedom of expression, association, and assembly. List 1 (pp. 4 - 31) details prisoners of conscience and list 2 (p. 33 - 63) details possible prisoners of conscience. A key to abbreviations used in the table can be found on p. 64
