CHINA                      Yang Chunlin (m), aged 52, human rights activist

Human rights activist Yang Chunlin, who was detained on 6 July, is said to have been tortured in Heitong Police Station in Jiamusi City, Heilongjiang province. He is still held incommunicado after more than three months in detention. Amnesty fears he is at further risk of torture and ill-treatment.

Yang has reportedly been subjected to a form of torture commonly used in China: his arms and legs were stretched and chained to the four corners of an iron bed, so that he could not move, and he had to eat, drink and defecate in that position. People subjected to this experience intense pain all over their body. He is believed to have suffered this treatment twice, for six days in early August and one day in September, and to have been forced to watch other people being subjected to this punishment and then clean up their defecation.

Yang is believed to have been tortured in this way partly because he has refused to confess to the crime of "subversion of state power" for his involvement in collecting signatures Yang Chunlin was detained for his involvement in collecting signatures for a petition entitled "We Want Human Rights, not the Olympics". He has reportedly also been teaching other inmates about their human rights.

Yang Chunlin had been active before his detention in supporting a legal action brought by more than 40,000 local farmers whose land had been confiscated without adequate compensation. In 2006 Yang was detained four times for his involvement in this case, and for his participation in a hunger strike organized by Beijing human rights lawyer Gao Zhisheng. Earlier this year he is said to have launched a campaign behind the slogan "We Want Human Rights, not the Olympics" to capture the frustration of local farmers, who feel that the Beijing Olympics is being used to distract attention from violations of their human rights, such as the confiscation of their land. Later the slogan was adopted by other groups around the country.
