GASAEV RELEASED BUT STILL IN DANGER

Murad Gasaev was released on 28 August from a detention centre in the southern Russian town of Piatigorsk. Investigators had found no evidence that he had been involved in the June 2004 attack on government buildings in the Russian republic of Ingushetia. However, according to Murat Gasaev's lawyer, law enforcement officers have repeatedly threatened his brother that Murad Gasaev would come to harm if he were released.

The charges against Murad Gasaev were dropped on 30 June. All the charges related to his alleged involvement in the June 2004 attack by around 200 members of armed groups on a Ministry of the Interior building in the capital of the Republic of Ingushetia, Nazran. Murad Gasaev's alibi was corroborated by five witnesses, and the only witness who implicated him in the attack retracted his statement during his own trial, saying he had been tortured to make him implicate Murad Gasaev.

The authorities kept Murad Gasaev in custody for almost two months; according to his lawyer, they did this in connection with an unrelated event in August 2003.

Murad Gasaev's lawyer has expressed deep concern over his client's safety in Russia, as law enforcement officers had threatened his brother since the beginning of this year that Murad Gasaev would come to harm if he were released, and also threatened his mother and other relatives.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Ethnic Chechen Murad Gasaev, who is a Russian citizen, was extradited from Spain on 31 December 2008 after the Spanish authorities received diplomatic assurances from the Russian government that he would not be tortured or otherwise ill-treated. He was held at a detention facility in Moscow, and moved to the pre-trial detention centre in Piatigorsk in January 2009.

According to prosecution, Murad Gasaev was a member of an armed group named Khalifat and "took part in several terrorist attacks against representatives of the state and law enforcement officers in the North Caucasus," including a June 2004 attack on a Ministry of the Interior building in the capital of the Republic of Ingushetia, Nazran.

Murad Gasaev claimed that in August 2004, when he was still in Ingushetia, he was detained for three days by Federal Security Service officers, who tortured and questioned him about the June 2004 attack. After three days of torture he was taken in a van and released in open country. He was not charged at the time, and he later left Russia.
