Further information on EXTRA 58/99 (AFR 57/04/99, 7 May 1999) - Fear of torture / Fear for safety / Prisoners of conscience

TOGO Tengue Nestor, human rights defender
 Gayibor François, human rights defender
 Sant'Anna Brice

Tengue Nestor, Gayibor François and Sant'Anna Brice were provisionally released from detention on 18 June 1999.

While Amnesty International welcomes the release of the three men, it is concerned that their release is provisional, and that police investigations into their cases are reported to be continuing. They have been charged with dénonciation calomnieuse et d'atteinte à l'honneur (false accusations and libel). While they were in detention, Amnesty International considered all three to be prisoners of conscience, and is calling for all charges against them to be dropped immediately.

The three men were arrested on 3 May 1999 in Lomé, following accusations that they had sent false information about human rights violations committed by government forces to international human rights organizations, including Amnesty International. Their arrests were linked to the publication in May of an Amnesty International report which accused the Togolese government of allowing the security forces to carry out grave human rights violations with impunity before, during and after the 1998 elections.

Nadjombe Antoine Koffi, a Togolese Amnesty International member, who was also arrested in connection with the report on Togo, was also released on 18 June (see UA 112/99, AFR 57/06/99, 18 May 1999, and follow-up, AFR 57/16/99, 23 June 1999).
