BRAZIL Carlito de Oliveira (m) (Indigenous leader)

Estevão Duarte (m) (brother)
Placida de Oliveira (f) (wife of Carlitos)
Inhabitants of Passo Pirajú, Guarani Kaiowa village

On 12 February, around 25 civil police officers stormed the Guarani Kaiowa Indigenous village of Passo Piraju, in the state of Mato Grosso do Sul, south-western Brazil, with orders to search for stolen goods. The police threatened and verbally abused the villagers, damaging their homes and the village school, and taking money and household goods. Four villagers, Carlito de Oliveira, Nilson Duarte, Estevão Duarte and Placida de Oliveira, are detained in two separate police stations in the area after being arrested during the police raid. They are at risk of being tortured or ill-treated in custody.

According to villagers' testimony, police entered the village at around 5am in order to search people's homes. Several residents reported having their doors kicked down, including one who said that a newborn baby was hit on the head by the impact of the door.

The daughter of Carlito de Oliveira described how she was in her family's house with her father and his nephews, aged 10 and seven, when police officers burst in and shouted, "Let's kill these piglets and we can stem this evil at the root" (vamos matar eses porquinhos que a gente já corta o mal pela raiz!).

The police officers forcibly evicted the family from the house. Carlito de Oliveira's daughter asked if the Fundação Nacional do Índio (FUNAI), the federal government agency responsible for Indigenous issues, had been informed of the police's activities, and was told by a police officer that FUNAI was not in charge and went on to say "I will kill you now so you keep your trap shut" (eu vou te matar agora pra você não abrir o bico!).

Other residents described how their children were unable to go to school as police destroyed the classroom, threw food on the floor and removed the school kitchen's only gas cylinder. Several families reported that their money, either from wages or from government benefits (Bolsa Familia), amounting to hundreds of Brazilian reais in many cases, was taken by the police during their searches. Others, including Carlito de Oliveira, said that they had been hit by officers during the operation.

Carlito de Oliveira, Nilson Duarte, Estevao Duarte and Placida de Oliveira were detained during the operation, accused of receiving stolen goods from a local farm, illegal possession of a weapon and the formation of a criminal gang. Carlito de Oliveira, Nilson Duarte and Estevão Duarte are detained in a police station in the town of Dourados. Placida de Oliveira is in custody in a separate police station.

In a recent court ruling, a state judge ordered that the four detainees should not receive legal assistance from FUNAI, to which all Indigenous Peoples in Brazil are entitled. Another state judge has overturned a request by federal prosecutors to release the detainees pending the full investigation into their alleged crimes. Amnesty International fears that the four are being denied access to justice and are in danger of torture or other ill-treatment in detention, in reprisal for the alleged killings of two police officers in 2006.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

The Guarani Kaiowa, in Mato Grosso do Sul, have suffered discrimination as a consequence of their fight for their ancestral land rights. For the residents of Passo Pirajú this discrimination increased following an irregular police operation in the village on 1 April 2006 which led to the deaths of two police officers. A number of the villagers are still awaiting trial for the killings.

Mato Grosso do Sul state contains some of the smallest, poorest and most densely populated Indigenous areas in Brazil: rural pockets of poverty surrounded by large soya and sugar cane plantations and cattle ranches where life is plagued by ill-health and squalid living conditions. Forty thousand Guarani-Kaiowa live a precarious existence – social breakdown has led to high levels of violence, suicide and malnutrition. The slowness of the handover of land from landowners to the Indigenous communities has exacerbated overcrowding on existing reservations. The Guarani-Kaiowa have been subjected to intimidation and violent evictions by landowners and state authorities.
